Digital Commons Institutional Repository

The academic year 2007-2008 represented the third year of operation for the UNL Digital Commons, which continues to be an extremely effective vehicle for disseminating the scholarly output of the University of Nebraska–Lincoln and affiliated organizations, as well as valuable means of enhancing the Library's status as a provider of electronic services to the UNL community. Following are some highlights:

1. Content recruitment. The amount of new material added to the repository exceeded that added the previous year: 7,118 open-access articles (19% more than the 5,977 added in 2006–2007), and 213 restricted-access ETD's (compared to 329 the previous year).

Significant collections were assembled in agronomy, agricultural economics, AGLEC (Agricultural Leadership, Education & Communication), the ADAPT program, animal sciences, biochemistry, biological sciences, educational psychology, electrical engineering, entomology, geosciences, music, natural resources, plant pathology, plant science, sociology, veterinary and biomedical science, and virology. Existing collections in psychology, physics, chemistry, English, political science, history, library science, and Teaching, Learning and Teacher Education were enhanced with substantial additional materials. The Internet Center for Wildlife Damage Management, the Lester Larson Tractor Test Museum, and the Manter Laboratory of Parasitology continued to be active partners, contributing large numbers of documents. A further highlight was the recruitment of several monograph series and entire journal runs: Court Review, Insecta Mundi, Cornhusker Economics, Nebraska Swine Reports, Nebraska Beef Reports, Journal of Parasitology, Nebraska Studies in Language, Literature, and Criticism, and Nebraska University Studies. Test runs of Great Plains Research and Great Plains Quarterly were also added.

A new recruitment strategy, where we first locate the articles and then pursue permission from the authors, proved much more successful than approaching potential participants "cold." The pressure of finding 30 to 50 documents per day for the work-study assistant (Jessi Chandler) to upload was an incentive to search hard and develop productive strategies for recruitment. In early February, I had no idea where our next dozen articles were coming from—yet, since then, we have located and added more than 4,500 documents, an average of over 900 per month. I was concerned that in the previous year we had gathered so much of the “low-hanging fruit” that harvesting would become much more difficult, but this has not been the case.

A chart of contents added by month is attached.

2. Usage & outreach. Perhaps the most surprising development has been in the overwhelming growth in usage of the online materials we have collected and posted. Usage continues to grow at a rate of 10% to 15% per month—for the year it increased by a factor of 3.72: there were 123,338 downloads from the repository in June 2008, compared to 33,197 in June 2007. For the year July '07–June '08, there were 829,225 downloads. Part of this reflects the growth of the contents, but much also results from the doubling of the usage rate per article: from 3.96 article<sup>-1</sup> month<sup>-1</sup> in June 2007, to 7.92 article<sup>-1</sup> month<sup>-1</sup> in June 2008.

Analysis of the sources of these downloads shows several significant facts: 1) 75% of downloads originate from Google searches; 2) one-third of Google-originated downloads are from outside the USA; and 3) downloads are regularly furnished to more than 120 countries.

A list of the most popular downloads is attached.

3. Staffing. Mention was made earlier of Jessi Chandler, the work-study assistant who specializes in uploading documents. Her outstanding contribution has made possible the rapid growth of the repository contents. Given her rate of output and her federally-subsidized wage, the library's cost for her work is roughly 10¢ per article added. Notice should also be given to Nathan Raabe, the work-study student who specialized in scanning and making PDF files from hard copy. Nathan rapidly became an expert at this, and the library's cost for his work (after federal subsidy) was about 3¢/page. Nathan's work made possible the additional of some very valuable content, including a number of whole books by Paul Johnsgard.

4. Outlook. For most of the year, the UNL Digital Commons was the fourth largest institutional repository in the USA. In June, Texas A&M added approximately 70,000 electronic records to their IR, jumping them to the head of the pack, and pushing UNL back to fifth. However, the UNL Digital Commons now stands only about 1200 documents behind MIT's D-Space, and at current rates of addition will overtake them and reclaim the fourth spot some time in early autumn.

Rankings aside, however, the better question is how well is the Digital Commons serving the UNL faculty? Indications are that it is doing very well in terms of both faculty participation and participant satisfaction. In fact, the most prolific source of new content over the past several months has been word of mouth: faculty telling other faculty that the IR is something they should participate in. The new challenge is in keeping up with gathering, preparing, and depositing the works of these volunteer participants.

On another front, I believe the Digital Commons (along with other digital initiatives) has helped to identify the Library as the best partner for UNL faculty who wish to explore or develop electronic publication and online dissemination of scholarly output. We have made a policy of working with all comers, and I would very much like to continue this, despite the added pressure brought about by our increased acceptance and success.
